
GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES RENEWAL ACT
OF 1984

SEPTEMBER 27, 1984.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany H.R. 6023]

[Including cost estimate of the Congressional Budget Office]

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 6023) to amend the Trade Act of 1974 to renew the authority for the operation of the Generalized System of Preferences, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause of the bill and inserts a new text which appears in italic type in the reported bill.

BACKGROUND AND PURPOSE

Statutory authority for the U.S. Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) is set forth in Title V of the Trade Act of 1974. Title V specifies criteria for determining GSP country and product eligibility and limitations on the extension of GSP treatment. Relatively minor amendments to the statute were made under the Tax Reform Act of 1976 and the Trade Agreements Act of 1979. In the absence of legislation to extend the program, the 10-year statutory authority for the GSP system will expire on January 3, 1985.

The GSP program provides unilateral, non-reciprocal duty-free tariff treatment to about 3,000 articles imported from 140 developing countries and territories to assist their economic development and diversification through preferential market access. The Committee on Ways and Means believes that this program, with the modifications provided for in H.R. 6023, as amended, is worthy of extension.

The concept of a GSP program was first introduced in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in 1964. Developing countries asserted that one of the major impediments to accelerated economic growth and development was their inability to compete on an equal basis with developed countries in the international trading system. Through tariff preferences, the developing countries claimed they could increase exports and foreign exchange earnings needed to diversify their economies and reduce dependence on foreign aid.

After several international meetings and long interagency debate, in 1968 the United States joined other industrialized countries in supporting the concept of GSP. As initially conceived, GSP systems were to be: (1) temporary, unilateral grants of preferences by developed countries to developing countries; (2) designed to extend benefits to sectors of developing countries which were not competitive internationally; and (3) designed to include safeguard mechanisms to protect domestic industries sensitive to import competition from articles receiving preferential tariff treatment. In the early 1970's, 19 other industrialized country members of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) instituted GSP schemes. With the exception of Canada, these countries have already extended their programs through 1990 or beyond, and Canada is expected to do so this year.

In order to implement their GSP systems, the developed countries had to obtain a waiver from the most-favored-nation provision under Article I of the General Agreement of Tariffs and Trade (GATT), which provides that trade among countries must be conducted on a nondiscriminatory basis. A ten-year MFN waiver was granted in June 1971 and provided that GSP schemes must be "generalized, non-discriminatory and non-reciprocal." This waiver was extended in 1979 in the same terms through the "enabling clause" of the so-called Framework Agreement adopted in the Tokyo round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations. The enabling clause, which has no expiration date, provides the legal basis for "special and differential" treatment for developing countries. Congress approved this understanding under the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 (P.L. 96-39).

It is the Committee's opinion that the GSP program is fulfilling its worthwhile objective of accelerating economic growth and development in the developing countries. By providing fair and reasonable access to the U.S. market, it has resulted in increased exports and foreign exchange earnings for such countries. Many of these earnings, in turn, are used by developing countries to purchase U.S. goods for export. This has been accomplished without significant adverse effects on the U.S. economy, as reflected in the data discussed below.

IMPORTS UNDER THE GSP PROGRAM

Although the value of U.S. imports receiving GSP duty-free treatment has grown from $3.2 billion in 1976 to $10.8 billion in 1983, imports receiving GSP duty-free treatment constitute only 4 percent of total U.S. imports. GSP duty-free imports constitute only about 11 percent of total U.S. imports of all products from GSP beneficiary countries. Further, the $10.8 billion imports entering duty-free under GSP in 1983 constituted only 15 percent of total U.S. imports of GSP-eligible products from all sources. Sixty-eight percent of total imports of these products entered from non-beneficiary countries subject to duty.

GSP imports have not resulted in significant increases in the overall import share of the U.S. market. GSP imports averaged only 0.5 percent or less of total U.S. consumption during the 1978-1981 period, as reported by the International Trade Commission (ITC). In only 12 of 650 sectors have GSP imports resulted in significant increases in import penetration. In many areas, increased GSP imports appear to be at the expense of imports from developed countries.

As of 1983, a greater volume of potential GSP-eligible imports were denied than were granted duty-free treatment. Of the $11.9 billion imports of GSP-eligible articles denied duty-free treatment, imports of $10.7 billion were articles from particular countries exceeding the statutory "competitive need" ceilings. The remaining imports of $1.2 billion were excluded as a result of discretionary "graduation" under an administrative procedure of the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) based upon (1) the country's general level of development; (2) the country's competitiveness in the particular product; and (3) overall U.S. economic interests, including domestic import sensitivity.

The Committee is concerned, however, that a relatively few advanced developing countries receive most of the GSP benefits, despite the growth of their imports excluded from eligibility annually under the "competitive need" limits and discretionary graduation of competitive articles. The three leading beneficiary countries (Taiwan, Korea, and Hong Kong) receive 52 percent of total benefits. Taiwan and Korea's share has actually increased somewhat since 1976. The leading seven beneficiary countries (including Mexico, Brazil, Singapore, and Israel) account for nearly 75 percent of total GSP imports. The least developed countries receive less than one percent of total GSP benefits. Developed countries and advanced developing countries, rather than other developing countries, usually gain import share following exclusion of competitive products from GSP eligibility.

The table below contains data on total U.S. imports and GSP imports from the leading beneficiary developing countries in 1983 and also lists the 1982 per capita GNP for each such country.

Because of the Committee's concerns about the uneven distribution of GSP benefits among beneficiary countries and particularly the larger concentration of benefits among a small number of more advanced developing countries, H.R. 6023 as amended would make a number of modifications in the program which are designed to promote the distribution of GSP benefits to less advanced developing countries.

SUMMARY OF H.R. 6023, AS AMENDED

H.R. 6023, as amended and ordered reported by the Committee on Ways and Means in the form of a substitute amends Title V of the Trade Act of 1974 to reauthorize the GSP program for an additional 5 years, until January 3, 1990. The bill would also make a number of substantive changes in the program.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

Section 1 sets forth the short title of the bill, the "Generalized System of Preferences Renewal Act of 1984" and outlines ten specific purposes of the bill.

SECTION 2. CONSIDERATION OF A BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRY'S COMPETITIVENESS IN EXTENDING PREFERENCES

Section 2 would amend section 501 of the Trade Act of 1974 to require the President to consider the effect on export expansion and the extent of a beneficiary developing country's (BDC) competitiveness in granting GSP benefits on any article.

SECTION 3. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO THE BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRY DESIGNATION CRITERIA

Section 3 would amend section 502 of the Trade Act to delete Hungary from the list of countries ineligible to receive GSP benefits and to preclude the President from designating any country a BDC which is not taking steps to afford "internationally recognized worker rights" to its people, unless he determines and reports to Congress that such a designation is in the national economic interest.

Further, in determining whether to designate a country a BDC, the President would be required to take into account three additional discretionary factors: the extent of that country's efforts (1) to protect intellectual property rights; (2) to reduce trade distorting investment practices and policies and barriers to trade in services; and (3) to afford "internationally recognized workers rights" to its workers. The President would be required to report to the Congress on his actions relating to the application of these and the other requirements of sections 501 and 502.

SECTION 4. ARTICLES WHICH MAY NOT BE DESIGNATED AS ELIGIBLE ARTICLES; REGULATIONS

Section 4 would add footwear, handbags, luggage, flat goods, work gloves and leather wearing apparel to the list of existing statutory product exclusions from GSP eligibility and require the Secretary of the Treasury to consult with USTR in promulgating regulations on GSP rules of origin requirements.

SECTION 5. LIMITATIONS ON PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT

Section 5 of the bill would make extensive changes to section 504 of the Trade Act regarding limitations on preferential treatment. The President would be required to conduct a general review of all GSP-eligible products by January 4, 1986 and periodically thereafter, and to report to the Congress by January 4, 1987 on actions he has taken to withdraw, suspend or limit GSP duty-free treatment. Based on the general product review and the country and product eligibility factors that condition GSP benefits, reductions in the competitive need limits of section 504(c) and waivers of such reductions are authorized for various groups of countries as follows:

Countries with a per capita GNP over $9,000 would be subject to graduation over a two-year phase-down period. After graduation, such countries would not be eligible for any GSP benefits. The President would have no authority to waive these provisions.

For countries with a per capita GNP of $5,000 or more or which account for 10 percent or more of GSP duty-free imports, the competitive need limits applicable to such country would mandatorily be cut in half on all of its GSP eligible products. However, the President would have authority to waive these cutbacks and restore the original competitive need limits on an article-by-article basis after receiving advice from the ITC. Waivers must be based on a determination that it is in the national economic interest, after considering the factors in sections 501 and 502(c), including efforts by the country to protect intellectual property rights, reduce trade barriers and trade distorting practices, and recognize worker rights.

Finally, for all other countries, the President may reduce the competitive need limits on an article-by-article basis for any article for which such country has "demonstrated a sufficient degree of competitiveness" (relative to other beneficiary developing countries). The President may waive such limits on any article for which the President has received the ITC advice and made the national economic interest determination described above. However, the total dollar value of such waivers for all such countries in any year cannot exceed 25 percent of total GSP duty-free imports from all BDCs.

As amended by H.R. 6023, the percentage competitive need limit would not apply to articles not produced in the United States as of January 3, 1985, or to imports of articles not exceeding $5 million. Changes in article designations would occur not later than July 1 of the year following the calendar year for which a determination has been made. Finally, articles which have lost GSP status could not be redesignated for two years.

SECTION 6. 5-YEAR EXTENSION OF THE GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCE AND REPORTS

Section 6 would extend the program until January 3, 1990, and require the President to submit a report on the operation of the program to the Congress by that date, as well as annual reports on the status of worker's rights in each BDC.

SECTION 7. AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS OF BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Section 7 would add a new provision to Title V of the Trade Act requiring appropriate U.S. agencies to assist BDC's to assure adequate production of foodstuffs for their citizenry.

SECTION 8. EFFECTIVE DATE

The effective date of the new Act would be January 4, 1985, the day after the expiration of the existing program.

COMMITTEE ACTION

The Subcommittee on Trade of the Committee on Ways and Means held hearings on various proposals to renew the GSP on August 3, 1983 and on February 8 and 9, 1984. Extensive testimony and comments were received from the Administration and industry and foreign trade associations in support of renewal, and from the AFL-CIO, agricultural interests, and leather product and textile and apparel associations in opposition. Subsequently two bills, H.R. 5136 and H.R. 6023, to renew the GSP program were introduced and referred to the Subcommittee.

In a markup session on September 13, 1984, the Subcommittee on Trade ordered H.R. 6023 reported favorably to the full Committee on Ways and Means by voice vote with a substitute amendment representing a compromise incorporating many of the provisions of the the original bills.

On September 26, 1984, the Committee on Ways and Means ordered H.R. 6023 favorably reported to the House by voice vote with an amendment.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS, JUSTIFICATION, AND COMPARISON WITH PRESENT LAW

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

Section 1 sets forth the title of the bill, the "Generalized System of Preferences Renewal Act of 1984", and outlines ten specific purposes of the legislation, to—

- (1) promote the development of developing countries (LDCs);
- (2) demonstrate that trade rather than aid is the best way to promote economic development;
- (3) capitalize on growing LDC markets for U.S. exports;
- (4) consider significant differences in development and competitiveness among LDC's;
- (5) encourage trade liberalization;
- (6) recognize LDC's need for foreign exchange earnings;
- (7) promote trade opportunities among LDC's;
- (8) integrate LDC's into the international trading system;
- (9) encourage LDC's—
 - (a) to eliminate trade and investment barriers in goods and services,
 - (b) to secure, exercise and enforce intellectual property rights,
 - (c) to afford workers internationally recognized workers' rights; and
- (10) address these concerns without adversely affecting U.S. producers and workers and in conformity with the GATT.

In setting forth these purposes, the Committee wishes to emphasize its recognition of the important and necessary role that the GSP program plays in our trading world. It provides benefits not only to developing countries but to developed countries as well. The United States and most other developed countries in the world have recognized their responsibility to assist the developing countries to become active participants in international trade and currently have in effect GSP programs.

The statement of purposes in section 1, however, also emphasizes that the developing nations which receive GSP benefits should, in accordance with the concept of graduation, assume responsibilities as well, if they are going to be fully embraced in the trading community. Among these important responsibilities, commensurate with their development level, are the removal of trade-distorting barriers and impediments to the free flow of goods and services, the protection of foreign nationals from infringements of exclusive intellectual property rights, and the application of internationally recognized worker rights.

SECTION 2. CONSIDERATION OF A BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRY'S COMPETITIVENESS IN EXTENDING PREFERENCES

Present law

Section 501 of the Trade Act of 1974 currently requires the President, in proclaiming GSP duty-free treatment on any eligible article from any beneficiary developing country (BDC) to have due regard for three factors: (1) the action's effect on furthering the development of BDCs; (2) comparable efforts by other developed countries; and (3) the action's anticipated impact on like or directly competitive products.

Explanation of provision and justification

Section 2 of H.R. 6023 as amended changes the scope of the President's basic authority to extend GSP treatment in a manner which is consistent with administrative practice under present law. It clarifies that in determining whether the economy of a BDC will be expanded as a result of GSP benefits, the President looks at whether such benefits will expand its exports. It also adds a fourth factor to section 501, which is currently included as a matter of administrative practice, requiring assessment of developing countries' competitiveness with respect to an eligible article.

By adding the words, "through an expansion of their exports", to paragraph (1) of section 501, the Committee intends that GSP duty-free treatment be granted in cases where it is clear a BDC's exports are likely to increase if such treatment is granted. One basis for such assessments should be the elasticity of demand for an article given changes in its price, to the extent such information is available. With respect to countries petitioning for benefits, special attention should be given to the extent to which that country is likely to benefit through increased exports as a result of receiving GSP benefits.

The fourth factor added to section 501 should be applied both in estimating a BDC's general economic progress and in determining its competitive ability in comparison to competing U.S. and third country industries. BDC's world and U.S. market shares, volumes and values of their exports, and their ability to penetrate foreign markets absent duty-free treatment should be considered. The Committee strongly believes that, absent showings that a BDC has limited economic strength, it should not receive GSP benefits on articles with respect to which it has demonstrated competitiveness. This is especially the case where a BDC's competitive advantages result primarily from subsidies or other unreasonable or unfair trade practices.

The factors enumerated in section 501 are intended as guides to the President's overall conduct of the program. The amendments made by section 2 emphasize Congressional intent that the existing administrative practice of discretionary graduation and assessment of GSP developmental benefits in terms of increased exports continue to be included in the petition process described later in this report under the section entitled "Administration of the GSP Program." Further, the Committee expects these factors to play a major role in the general review of eligible articles required by section 5 of the bill, in which new limitations are placed on preferential treatment. The four factors will also be considered when decisions are made under section 5 with respect to waivers of competitive need limitations.

SECTION 3. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO THE BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRY DESIGNATION CRITERIA

Present law

Section 502 currently sets out both the procedures for designating countries as BDCs and the conditions for such designation. The President must notify the Congress of his intention and the considerations entering his decision before designating any beneficiary country. Before terminating the designation of any BDC, the President must provide the Congress and the country concerned at least 60 days advance notice of his intention, together with the reasons. The President must withdraw or suspend the designation if he determines the country no longer meets the conditions for designation.

The President may designate an association of countries which is a free trade area or customs union or contributing to comprehensive regional economic integration for treatment as a single BDC. The Andean Group, the ASEAN, and the CARICOM associations of countries have been designated for treatment as single countries under the program.

Section 502 also establishes conditions for the designation of countries, some of which are mandatory and others of which are discretionary. With regard to the mandatory conditions, the President is prohibited from designating any country for GSP benefits which is a developed country listed in section 501(b) and below:

Australia, Austria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, European Economic Community member states, Finland, Germany (East), Hungary, Iceland, Japan, Monaco, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Republic of South Africa, Sweden, Switzerland, and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Further, the President is prohibited from designating any country for GSP benefits which:

1. is a communist country unless (a) its products receive most-favored-nation (MFN) treatment; (b) it is a GATT Contracting Party and a member of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and (c) it is not dominated or controlled by international communism;
2. has nationalized or expropriated U.S. property, unless the President determines and reports to Congress there is adequate compensation, negotiations are underway to provide compensation, or a dispute over compensation is in arbitration.
3. fails to recognize as binding or fails to enforce arbitral awards in U.S. favor;
4. affords "reverse preferences" with a significant adverse effect on U.S. commerce;
5. is a member of OPEC or other arrangement and withholds supplies of vital commodity resources or raises their price to unreasonable levels, causing serious disruption of the world economy. Under a 1979 amendment, countries which entered bilateral product-specific MTN agreements with the United States prior to January 3, 1980, are exempt from this condition unless they subsequently interrupt or terminate oil supplies to the United States;

6. does not take adequate steps to cooperate in preventing illegal drug traffic into the United States; or

7. aids or abets international terrorism.

The President may waive conditions (4), (5), (6), and (7) if he determines and reports with reasons to Congress that designation of the country is in the national economic interest.

Section 502(c) sets forth several discretionary factors which the President must "take into account" in designating BDCs.

They are—

1. an expressed desire of the country to be designated;
2. the country's level of economic development;
3. whether other major developed countries extend GSP to the country; and
4. the extent to which the country has assured the United States it will provide "equitable and reasonable access" to its markets and basic commodity resources.

With regard to item 4 (section 502(c)(4)), it is noted that the Committee recognizes and approves of the President's interpretation of the current statute. The interpretation of this provision has been that, where section 502(c)(4) is considered, BDC's export practices are also to be taken into account in determining what action may be appropriate. The Committee understands that use of export subsidies and production subsidies affecting competitiveness in world markets is considered where required by reference to section 502(c)(4). This interpretation is of particular importance in emphasizing that GSP benefits should be granted on the basis of economic ability rather than as a reward for unfair or unreasonable trade practices.

Explanation of provision and justification

Section 3 makes several amendments to section 502 relating to BDC designation criteria. First, subsection (b) would amend the list of developed countries in section 502(b) which are ineligible to receive benefits by deleting Hungary. The purpose of the list of countries in section 502(b) is to prevent developed countries from receiving the benefits of GSP. However, Hungary's per capita GNP of $2,270 in 1982 (according to the World Development Report) is less than the per capita GNP of several other BDC's under the GSP program. While per capita GNP is not necessarily an adequate or sole measure of development level, the Committee does believe that these circumstances warrant deletion from the list of countries excluded from GSP by statute. The Committee also notes with approval that Hungary is a member in good standing of both the GATT and the IMF and currently receives MFN treatment on its exports to the United States.

The fact that Hungary has been deleted from the list, however, should not be interpreted as an indication of Congressional intent that it should necessarily receive GSP benefits or that it should be regarded as a developing country in other contexts. The Committee recognizes that Hungary has considered itself to be a developed country in the past, and in fact was one of the first countries to implement a GSP scheme in 1971. Should Hungary decide to apply for GSP status, the President shall apply the standards of section 501 and 502 and make a decision on its application solely on the merits of the case which Hungary presents.

Subsection (b) would further amend section 502(b) by adding the phrase "including patents, trademarks, or copyrights" to paragraphs 4 (A), (B) and (C) to insure that these mandatory provisions relating to a country's nationalization, expropriation, or seizure of property also apply equally to these intangible property rights as well. The Committee amended this provision to clarify that repudiation or nullification by a foreign government of patent, trademark, or other intellectual property rights which has the effect of nationalizing or expropriating U.S. property would lead to disqualification. If the government repudiates a patent or trademark right through legislative or administrative means, and if such repudiation has the effect of a nationalization or expropriation, then designation could not occur unless the President makes a determination that such a designation would be in the national economic interest. It is noted that this amendment relates only to actions by a government which would have the effect of nullifying or repudiating patent, trademark, or other intellectual property rights. An amendment discussed below relates to whether the government has provided satisfactory protection against private acts infringing intellectual property rights.

Subsection (b) would also add a new mandatory condition for designating a BDC. Under new condition (8), a country may not be designated a BDC "if such country has not taken or is not taking steps to afford internationally recognized worker rights to workers in the country (including any designated zone in that country)". Like conditions (4) through (7) in existing section 502(b), the President may waive this condition if he determines and reports with reasons to Congress that designation of a particular country is in the national economic interest. As defined in subsection (a), the term "internationally recognized worker rights" includes—

- (A) the right of association;
- (B) the right to organize and bargain collectively;
- (C) a prohibition on the use of any form of forced or compulsory labor;
- (D) a minimum age for the employment of children; and
- (E) acceptable conditions of work with respect to minimum wages, hours of work, and occupational safety and health.

The Committee believes that promoting respect for the internationally recognized rights of workers is an important means of ensuring that the broadest sectors of the population within BDCs benefit from the GSP program. The capacity to form unions and to bargain collectively to achieve higher wages and better working conditions is essential for workers in developing countries to attain decent living standards and to overcome hunger and poverty. The denial of internationally recognized worker rights in developing countries tend to perpetuate poverty, to limit the benefits of economic development and growth, to narrow privileged elites, and to sow the seeds of social instability and political rebellion.

Furthermore, the Committee is concerned that the lack of basic rights for workers in many LDCs is a powerful inducement for capital flight and overseas production by U.S. industries. The tremendous disparity in labor rights between many American workers and the absence of those rights for workers in many developing countries is a growing factor in the competitive decline of many of our basic industries.

There already exists a well-established policy in U.S. foreign assistance programs of denying aid or loans to LDCs found to have gross violations of political rights. The Committee deems it appropriate that GSP benefits also be extended with a view toward promoting respect for the basic rights of workers within BDCS.

The United States has embraced labor rights, in principle, as well as political rights for all of the people of the world upon adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948. The Declaration specifically affirms for each person the right to a job, the right to form and join unions, and the right to an adequate standard of living. It is not the expectation of the Committee that developing countries come up to the prevailing labor standards of the United States and other highly-industrialized developed countries. It is recognized that acceptable minimum standards may vary from country to country. However, the Committee does expect the President, in granting duty-free access to the U.S. market, to require that any developing country specifically demonstrate respect for the internationally recognized rights of its workers described in section 3(a) of the bill.

Finally, subsection (c) would add three additional factors as paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) to the discretionary criteria under section 502(c) which the President takes into account when determining whether to designate any country a BDC, and in all other determination regarding country or product eligibility:

(5) the extent to which such country is providing adequate and effective means under its laws for foreign nationals to secure, to exercise, and to enforce exclusive rights in intellectual property, including patents, trademarks, and copyrights;

(6) the extent to which such country has taken action to—

(A) reduce trade distorting investment practices and policies (including export performance requirements); and

(B) reduce or eliminate barriers to trade in services; and

(7) whether or not such country has taken or is taking steps to afford to workers in that country (including any designated zone in that country) internationally recognized worker rights.

The Committee strongly believes that countries wishing to reap the benefits of preferential duty-free access to the U.S. market must fulfill international responsibilities in these three important areas.

In order to determine whether a country is providing "adequate and effective means" regarding intellectual property, the President should consider, among other factors, the extent of statutory protection for intellectual property (including the scope and duration of such protection), the remedies available to aggrieved parties, the willingness and ability of the government to enforce intellectual property rights on behalf of foreign nationals, the ability of foreign nationals effectively to enforce their intellectual property rights on their own behalf, and whether the country's system of law imposes formalities or similar requirements that, in practice, are an obstacle to the meaningful protection for foreign nationals not imposed on domestic concerns. The term "foreign nationals" is intended to refer to U.S. nationals and nationals of other countries with whom U.S. nationals have a contractual or similar relationship with respect to the sale or licensing of intellectual property, for example, a non-U.S. licensee of the rights owned by a U.S. national.

The Committee recognizes that the new paragraph (5) does not provide a single, objective test for determining whether the law of a foreign country provides adequate and effective protection for intellectual property. This is not a standard susceptible to such a simplistic test, however, since there are a wide range of acceptable standards which vary from country to country. It is anticipated, however, that the President will consult with appropriate parties, including the U.S. Copyright Office and the Patent and Trademark Office, to fashion a set of general guidelines to be applied consistently and objectively.

The Committee is extremely concerned about the growing problem of counterfeiting which is costing American jobs, threatening the health and safety of consumers, and undermining the ability of American businesses to compete in world markets. According to a recent report by the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Energy and Commerce (Unfair Foreign Trade Practices & Stealing American Intellectual Property: Imitation is not Flattery; Committee Print 98-V; February 1984, pg. 1), "the direct loss in sales to American companies for counterfeit merchandise runs into the tens of billions of dollars".

Nor is the problem restricted to sales in the U.S. market. The report goes on to say, at page 2:

Although violating U.S. patents, trademarks or copyrights, many counterfeit products manufactured in foreign countries never reach the U.S. market. It is difficult enough for a U.S. company whose product is being imitated to stop sales in the United States. In cases of foreign market sales, however, it is practically impossible for American firms to stop commercial pirates. Such laws as may exist to protect intellectual property rights in developing nations, where most of the activity takes place, are usually inadequate. Moreover, enforcement is unaggressive or non-existent, especially against a local company. The result is that American companies lose billions of dollars of sales in both the foreign and U.S. domestic market.

The Committee urges the President to fully utilize the authority provided for in this legislation to seek the cooperation of BDCs under the GSP program to combat this serious problem.

With regard to new paragraph (6), the Committee is particularly concerned about the severe adverse impact on international trade in goods and services that has resulted from a number of practices of developing countries. For example, the Committee is concerned that U.S. export opportunities, which often are generated by U.S. investments abroad, are increasingly thwarted by requirements of host countries that U.S. firms limit their imports from the United States or that, as a condition of approval of an investment, firms agree to performance requirements; for example, producing a certain percentage for exports. Such measures are replacing more traditional forms of import restrictions throughout the world as serious trade barriers. Similarly, the proliferation of barriers to trade in services, such as restrictions on the establishment and operation of enterprises providing services and the denial of national treatment, needs to be addressed in this increasingly important sector of international trade. The Committee considers it to be entirely appropriate to raise these trade barriers as issues in applying section 502(c)(4) to country designation and waive decisions under section 504(c).

Finally, with regard to new paragraph (7), the Committee urges the President to consider the principles discussed earlier with regard to internationally recognized worker rights in designating countries as BDC's. The reference on both section 502(b)(8) and section 502(c) to any designated zone in the particular country is intended to ensure that consideration of whether a particular country conforms to these provisions is based upon the existence of substantial uniformity between the conditions relating to internationally recognized worker rights in such zones and such rights otherwise applicable to workers in that country. The purpose of the provision is to ensure that designated zones are not used by the country as a means to circumvent the designation criteria on workers rights and to ensure the application of these criteria to the country as a whole.

SECTION 4. ARTICLES WHICH MAY NOT BE DESIGNATED AS ELIGIBLE
ARTICLES; REGULATIONS

Present law

Section 503(c) of the 1974 Trade Act prohibits GSP duty-free treatment from being granted to the following articles:

- (a) textiles and apparel articles subject to textile agreements;
- (b) watches;
- (c) import-sensitive electronic articles;
- (d) import-sensitive steel articles;
- (e) footwear; and
- (f) import-sensitive semi-manufactured and manufactured glass products.

The President must also exclude any other articles he determines to be import sensitive in the context of GSP.

The Secretary of the Treasury has general authority, pursuant to general headnote 11 of the TSUS, and 19 U.S.C. 66, 1623 and 1624 to issue rules and regulations governing the admission of imported articles.

Explanation of provision and justification

Section 4 would substitute a new subparagraph (E) in the list of import-sensitive articles which are excluded by statute from eligibility for GSP treatment by expanding the current exclusion of certain footwear to encompass footwear, handbags, luggage, flat goods, work gloves and leather wearing apparel which were not eligible articles for purposes of GSP on April 1, 1984. This exclusion is identical to that in the Caribbean Basic Economic Recovery Act. The articles encompassed by this amendment are classified under the following items of the Tariff Schedules of the United States: 700.05—700.27, 700.29—700.53, 700.56—700.83, 700.95, 705.35, 705.85, 705.86, 706.05—706.16, 706.21—706.32, 706.34, 706.36, 706.38, 706.41, 706.43, 706.55, 706.62, or 791.76.

These items already are excluded administratively under the program, but the Committee determined that to prevent their possible designation in the future, a statutory exception was warranted similar to that accorded certain other products.

With respect to the current exclusion for "import-sensitive steel articles" in subparagraph (D) of section 503(c), the Committee urges the USTR to interpret this provision to include articles of the kinds subject to ITC import relief investigation numbered TA-201-51, and steel articles provided for under TSUS items 652-97 and 653.00. The Committee is distressed that many fabricated steel products such as components of bridges and high-rise buildings, are being imported duty-free under the GSP from BDCs such as Korea, despite the fact that such imports are severely impacting the U.S. steel industry, particularly on the West Coast.

Section 4(b) of the bill would further amend section 503 of the Trade Act by adding a new paragraph (d) providing for the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations governing GSP rule-of-origin requirements "after consulting with the U.S. Trade Representative." This amendment was adopted, at the request of USTR, because the Committee believes that since that agency is responsible for the administration of the GSP program, as well as the Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI) program, which has similar rules-of-origin requirements, it should have the opportunity to provide input to the Secretary of the Treasury in prescribing regulations carrying out the rules-of-origin requirements of this program. It is hoped that this input would help to ensure the uniform application of the rules-of-origin requirements for both the GSP and CBI programs.

This amendment only provides for a consultative process, however. The Committee recognizes that the Department of the Treasury, and more specifically the U.S. Customs Service, is responsible for regulating the importation of goods into the United States. Therefore, under this amendment, the Secretary of the Treasury will continue to have the ultimate responsibility for the final content of these regulations.

SECTION 5. LIMITATIONS ON PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT

Present law

The President has general authority under section 504(a) to withdraw, suspend, or limit the application of GSP duty-free treatment and restore MFN duties with respect to any article or any country after considering the factors in section 501 and 502(c). He may not, however, establish intermediate rates of duty.

In addition to the removal of particular articles based on their import sensitivity, there are two ways in which GSP treatment of particular products from particular BDCs has been withdrawn: (1) automatic exclusion under the statutory "competitive need" limits; and (2) discretionary graduation.

The basic purpose of the statutory competitive need limitations set forth under section 504(c)(1) of present law are: (1) to establish a benchmark for determining when a BDC's products are able to compete in the U.S. market and therefore are no longer in need of preferential tariff treatment; and (2) to reallocate GSP benefits to less competitive producers. The limits have also provided some measure of protection to domestic producers of like or directly competitive products.

If imports of a particular product from a particular BDC exceed either (1) a value level adjusted annually in relation to changes in the U.S. gross national product ($25 million in 1974 and equivalent to $57.7 million in 1983) or (2) 50 percent of the total value of U.S. imports of the article from all sources in a particular calendar year, GSP treatment is automatically removed entirely on that article from that country not later than 90 days after the close of that calendar year. The article may be redesignated for GSP treatment in a subsequent calendar year if imports of the product from that country have fallen below the competitive need ceilings then in effect.

There are three statutory circumstances in which the competitive need limit may not apply: First, if the President determines that a product like or directly competitive with a particular GSP product was not produced in the United States on January 3, 1975, then that GSP product is exempt from the 50-percent, but not the dollar value, competitive need limit. Second, the President has discretionary authority under 1979 amendments to the program to waive the 50-percent competitive need ceiling for products for which total U.S. imports are de minimis, i.e., not more than $1 million during the preceding calendar year adjusted annually to reflect the growth in U.S. GNP ($1.37 million in 1983). Third, the President may waive both competitive need limits for a particular country based on a determination that:

- (1) there has been a historical preferential trade relationship between the United States and such country;
- (2) there is a treaty or trade agreement in force covering economic relations between such country and the United States; and
- (3) such country does not discriminate against, or impose unjustifiable or unreasonable barriers to, United States commerce.

This waiver authority, which was designed for possible exemption of the Philippines, has never been utilized.

The second way in which a product may lose its GSP eligibility is through discretionary graduation pursuant to section 504(a). Discretionary graduation, as outlined in the President's "Report to the Congress on the First Five Years' Operation of the U.S. Generalized System of Preferences" (transmitted April 17, 1980, printed as WMCP: 96-58), was initiated by USTR as an administrative procedure in March 1981. It is a product-by-product consideration based on (1) the general economic development level of the BDC; (2) the competitive position of the BDC with respect to the particular product; and (3) overall economic interests of the United States, including the import sensitivity of the sector and the extent to which GSP imports from the BDC may have adversely affected U.S. producers and workers. In addition, discretionary graduation is based on a consideration of the four country eligibility factors listed in section 502(c).

Discretionary graduation is designed to promote the continued graduation of the more advanced developing countries from GSP benefits in products where they have demonstrated competitiveness. In addition, discretionary graduation is intended to promote a shift of benefits to the less advanced and less competitive developing countries.

The following table demonstrates the effect on GSP duty-free import coverage of product exclusions from particular countries under the competitive need ceilings and discretionary graduation:

PRODUCT GRADUATION UNDER THE GSP

(Dollar amounts in millions)

Year	Discretionary graduation	Competitive need exclusions	Total exclusions	GSP-free imports	Ratio of exclusion to GSP imports (percent)
1980.....	$443	$5,600	$6,043	$7,328	0.82
1981.....	651	6,782	7,433	8,395	.89
1982.....	900	7,108	8,008	8,426	.95
1983.....	1,211	10,661	11,872	10,765	1.11

Note: Data shown for graduation and competitive need exclusions pertain to actions implemented in March of the following year.

Explanation of provision and justification

Section 5 of H.R. 6023 as amended would retain the basic competitive need limitations of present law, and would provide additional authority to reduce the benefit limits further. In addition, the amendments proposed in section 5 would authorize the President to waive the limits in recognition of BDC action on trade matters of concern to the United States. The new authorities are designed to further the original aims of the Congress to achieve a broad distribution of GSP benefits to countries most in need. At the same time, they encourage developing countries to participate more fully in the world economic system by, for example, reducing trade restrictions to their markets, providing greater protection of U.S. intellectual property rights, and improving working conditions for their citizens.

Subsection (a) amends section 504(a) to require the President to submit a detailed report to the Congress by January 4, 1987, discussing the application of sections 501 and 502(c), as amended, including the extent to which the factors provided for therein are being complied with by individual countries. The report also must include a complete discussion of any action the President has taken under this section to withdraw, suspend, or limit GSP benefits to any country that has failed to adequately take into account the actions described in section 502(c).

It is the expectation of the Committee that the President will vigorously exercise the authority under section 504 as amended to withdraw, suspend, or limit GSP benefits with respect to countries which do not meet the new criteria under section 502. Where valid and reasonable complaints are raised by U.S. firms concerning a BDC's market access policy or protection of intellectual property rights, for example, it is expected that such interests will be given prominent attention by the President in deciding whether to modify GSP duty-free treatment for that country. The report would advise the Congress on the measures the President has taken in response to such valid and reasonable complaints.

Section 5(b) of the bill, as amended, would retain the basic competitive need standards currently provided for in section 504(c)(1), but would make substantial changes in their application to particular countries in order to encourage a more equitable distribution of GSP benefits among countries based upon their relative development level and competitiveness in particular products. First, subsection (b) amends section 504(c) by adding a new paragraph (2) to require a general review by the President on all GSP-eligible articles based on the country and product eligibility considerations of sections 501 or 502(c). This review, which is distinct from the annual product reviews that will continue as under existing law, must be completed not later than January 4, 1986 and periodically thereafter. The general review will seek to identify articles in which a BDC has demonstrated, compared to other BDCs, that it has achieved sufficient competitiveness in a particular product so that it is appropriate to trigger faster graduation from benefits.

The following factors in section 501 or 502(c), as amended by the bill, would govern the President's determinations in the general product review:

- (1) the effect such action will have on furthering the economic development of developing countries through the expansion of their exports;
- (2) whether or not the other major developed countries are extending generalized preferential tariff treatment to such product or products;
- (3) the anticipated impact of such action on United States producers of like or competitive products;
- (4) the extent of BDC's competitiveness with respect to eligible articles;
- (5) an expression of the country's desire for GSP treatment;
- (6) the economic developmental level of individual BDCs;
- (7) the extent to which the BDC has assured the United States it will provide equitable and reasonable access to the markets and basic commodity resources of such country;
- (8) the extent to which U.S. intellectual property rights are recognized;
- (9) the extent to which the country has taken action to reduce or eliminate barriers to trade and services; and
- (10) the extent to which the country has taken steps to afford internationally recognized rights to its workers.

On the basis of this review of product competitiveness and the additional new statutory standards pertaining to a country's relative development level, the President will be authorized to make “cutbacks” in the competitive need limits as described below. These reductions, which are mandatory for some countries and discretionary for others, would result in lower dollar and percentage competitive need limits.

At the same time, in order to promote further the goal of promoting important U.S. trade interests, paragraph (6) amends section 504(c) to allow the President to waive the application of competitive need limits as described below. For some countries this waiver authority would only allow restoration of benefits which have been reduced by procedures described above and would not permit waiver beyond the competitive need limits in present law. For others, it provides the latitude to waive competitive need limits and expand GSP benefits on a product-by-product basis. These waivers can be made if the following circumstances are met:

(1) the President receives the advice of the ITC on whether any U.S. industry is likely to be adversely affected by the proposed waiver;

(2) the President determines, based on the ITC advice and the considerations described in section 501 and 502(c) as amended, that the waiver is in the U.S. national economic interest; and

(3) he publishes this determination in the Federal Register.

The purpose of granting the President this waiver authority is to provide him additional tools to achieve U.S. trade interests with BDCs, such as greater market access for U.S. exports, greater discipline in protecting intellectual property rights, and improvements in workers rights. However, in order to prevent abuse of this discretionary waiver authority and to insure that GSP benefits are dispersed among BDCs which truly need them, several restrictions on the President's waiver authority are included. The bill as amended provides varying degrees of cutback and waiver authority of three different groupings of countries.

None of these changes would go into effect before January 3, 1986. This one-year period from date of enactment of the bill will give the President the opportunity to conduct the initial general product review required under section 504(c)(2) as amended, and to discuss with individual BDCs the potential application of the new designation criteria under section 502(b) and (c). This period is also necessary for adjustment by BDCs and the trading public.

Per capita GNP below $5,000 and GSP share below 50 percent.— For any country which had a per capita income of less than $5,000 and accounted for less than 10 percent of total U.S. GSP duty-free imports in the preceding calendar year, the President may effectively reduce the competitive need limits by one-half for any article from such country which he determines to meet the test under the general product review of “sufficient degree of competitiveness”. This would be accomplished by changing the base year for adjusting the dollar limit in sections 504(c)(1)(A) from “1974” to “1984”, thus reducing the absolute amount from the present $57 million to $25 million, and by reducing the percentage limit in section 504(c)(1)(B) from 50 percent to 25 percent. Any such article from such country for which imports into the United States in any calendar year exceed $25 million (indexed annually to changes in the U.S. GNP) or exceed 25 percent of total U.S. imports of the article, would be ineligible for GSP duty-free treatment in subsequent years unless imports fall below these new competitive need limits for two consecutive years.

The President may waive the competitive need limits on any article, except that the total dollar value of all waivers for such countries for any calendar year may not exceed 25 percent of the total value of GSP duty-free imports from all BDCs in the previous calendar year. Only those waivers on articles from countries with a per capita GNP of below $5,000 and which accounted for less than 10 percent of duty-free GSP imports will be assessed against this 25 percent total waiver authority, and such waivers shall only be counted to the extent they exceed the present competitive need limitations on such articles under section 504(c)(1) (i.e., $57 million/50 percent). Waivers under the de minimis and "no U.S. production" criteria in section 504(d) shall not be included in this calculation.

Each such waiver must be based on the national economic interest determination by the President required in new paragraph (5) of section 504(c). This determination must be based on ITC advice, and consideration of the factors in section 501 and 502(c), including efforts by the country to protect intellectual property rights, reduce trade barriers and trade distorting practices, and recognize workers rights.

Per capita GNP $5,000 or more or GSP share of 10 percent or more.—For any country which the President has determined either had a per capita GNP of $5,000 or more or accounted for more than ten percent of total GSP duty-free imports in the preceding calendar year, the competitive need limits applicable to that country must be cut in half for all of its GSP-eligible products (i.e., to the 1974 level of $25 million and from 50 percent to 25 percent as described above).

The President may waive this cutback in competitive need limits for any article from such a country, after taking into account the ITC advice and making the national interest determination under new section 504(c)(5) as described above, and restore the present limits (i.e., up to $57 million/50 percent). However, under no circumstances may the competitive need limits for any article be increased beyond the levels now authorized under section 504(c)(1).

Per capita GNP $9,000 or more.—Finally, if a country reaches a level of $9,000 per capita GNP in any calendar year (none have currently attained this level), all of that country's products would be graduated from receiving any GSP benefits over a two-year period under new paragraph (4) of section 504(c). The competitive need limits on those products subject to the present limits (i.e., $57 million/50 percent) during the calendar year when the $9,000 GNP level is attained, would be cut in half (i.e., $25 million/25 percent) for two years and then completely removed from GSP eligibility. Articles which had been subject to the reduced ($25 million/25 percent) limits during the year in which the $9,000 level was reached would remain eligible for GSP benefits at these competitive need limits for one year, and then would be ineligible for GSP benefits in the following year. Thus after a two-year period, the country would be completely graduated and none of its articles would be eligible for GSP benefits. The President would have no waiver authority for these countries.

It is the Committee's belief that countries which reach a per capita GNP level of $9,000 should be considered to be developed countries for purposes of the GSP program and therefore no longer in need of the benefits of preferential duty-free treatment.

The competitive need and waiver authorities under section 5 of the bill are summarized as follows as they amend present law and apply to particular countries:

SUMMARY OF COMPETITIVE NEED AND WAIVER AUTHORITY IN H.R. 6023, AS AMENDED

Present law		H.R. 6023, as amended
Country graduation.....	No provision.....	Countries with GNP $9,000 or over phased from GSP over 2-yr period.
Product graduation:
Countries with 10 percent GSP share or $5,000 GNP.	If imports of article from country exceeds competitive need limits of $57.7 million or 50 percent of total U.S. imports of article in preceding calendar year, GSP ceases on that article from that country 90 days thereafter.	Cutback: ¹ Mandatory on all articles to $25,000,000 or 25 percent limits.	Buy Back: ² May restore present $57.7 million or 50 percent limits on article basis. ¹
All other countries.....	do.....	Discretionary article-by-article to $25,000,000 or 25 percent limits depending on competitiveness. ²	Same, except may also exceed these limits on maximum 25 percent of total GSP annual imports. ¹

² In determining whether to exercise discretion, the President must consider the factors described in sec. 501 or 502(c) and determine that the BDC has demonstrated a sufficient degree of competitiveness (relative to other BDC's) with respect to any such article.

Other limitations.—H.R. 6023, as amended, would continue with modification two other provisions of existing law relating to limitations on preferential treatment. Under the bill, the competitive need limit in section 504(c)(1)(B) (i.e., the 50 percent limit) would not apply to any eligible article if a like or directly competitive article is not produced in the United States on January 3, 1985 (an updating from January 3, 1974 in present law). Nor would the 50 percent ceiling apply to any article for which the total imports of such article in the previous calendar year did not exceed $5 million, as adjusted for growth in GNP (present law is $1 million).

Section 5(b) of the bill would also maintain the provision under section 504(c)(4) of present law as a new paragraph (6) that authorizes the President to waive competitive need limits in strictly limited circumstances that, in effect, are intended to be applicable solely to the Philippines.

New paragraph (7) of section 504(c) amends paragraph (2) of present law, which authorizes the President to restore preferential treatment withdrawn because import levels reached the ceilings set by the competitive need limits. As amended, redesignation can occur, subject to the provisions of sections 501 and 502, only if imports of such articles do not exceed the applicable limitations during the preceding two-calendar-year period, rather than the one-year period provided for under present law.

A final amendment to section 504 would provide that all changes in article designations and competitive need limits would occur not later than July 1 of the year following the calendar year for which a determination has been made, rather than within 90 days after the close of the calendar year under section 504(c)(1) of present law. This change is intended to allow the U.S. Customs Service and the trading public sufficient time to adjust to modifications in product eligibility and competitive need limits and for the ITC to publish such changes in the tariff schedules. The purpose of this change is to provide advance notice of modifications in the program before they actually go into effect; it is not intended to extend the time period for the President to make and announce his decisions. Therefore, the Committee expects that the President will publish his decisions with respect to GSP article or country designations, competitive need limitations, or waivers thereof by April 1 of each year so that the remaining 3-month period to July 1 may be used by all parties to prepare for the implementation of the published changes.

SECTION 6. 5-YEAR EXTENSION OF THE GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES AND REPORTS

Present law

The authority for the President to grant GSP duty-free treatment under Title V of the Trade Act terminates by statute (section 505(a)) on January 3, 1985. Section 505(b) required the President to submit a report to the Congress on the operation of the program within 5 years after the enactment of the Trade Act. The President did submit such a report to the Congress within the prescribed time limits.

Explanation of provision and justification

Section 6 would amend section 505 of the Act to provide for a 5-year extension of the program, to January 3, 1990. The amendments to section 505 would require the President to submit to the Congress a full and complete report on operation of the program by that date, as well as annual reports on the status of internationally recognized worker rights within each beneficiary developing country. This report on program operation should also comment on changes in the administrative procedures described below, and on the program's impact on U.S. producers of like or directly competitive products and BDC exports.

With respect to the reports on workers rights, it is noted that the President already submits an annual report to the Congress under section 116(d) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 prepared by the Departments of State and Labor on human rights. It is the Committee's intent that the information required under section 505(c) be included as a separate section in that annual report. Furthermore, the report should address specifically the extent that each of the rights included in the statutory definition of internationally recognized worker rights is respected within each BDC.

SECTION 7. AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS OF BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Section 7 would add a new section 506 to the Trade Act of 1974 directing the appropriate U.S. agencies to assist beneficiary developing countries in the development and implementation of measures to assure that agricultural sectors of their economies are not directed to export markets to the detriment of the production of foodstuffs for their citizens.

SECTION 8. EFFECTIVE DATE

Section 8 provides that the amendments made by this Act will take effect on January 4, 1985, the day after the termination date of the authority for the current program.

Administration of the GSP program

In order to administer the requirement under section 503 of present law that GSP duty-free treatment not apply to any import-sensitive articles and to consider articles for possible addition to the GSP eligibility list, the USTR established by regulation an annual petition review procedure under the interagency Trade Policy Study Committee (TPSC). USTR has applied its same administrative procedure to consideration of petitions requesting discretionary graduation since its initiation in 1981 to accompany statutory graduation under the competitive need limits.

These regulations provide that any interested party may petition to have articles added to, or removed from, the GSP list. In addition, the TPSC may consider modifications to the GSP list on its own motion. The GSP Subcommittee of the TPSC is responsible for administering the GSP program and conducting the initial review of all petitions. The petitioner is responsible for providing a detailed economic analysis to support the request for product modification. Petitions are required to include, to the extent possible, information on U.S. and developing country production, employment, costs, and profits. Public hearings on petitions are announced in the Federal Register and are held before the GSP Subcommittee.

In determining whether to grant petition requests to add products to the GSP list, the interagency committees take into account the legally required advice from the ITC, the views of all interested parties, and background studies prepared by the member agencies of the TPSC. Special attention is paid to the potential impact of duty-free treatment on U.S. producers of like or directly competitive products as well as developing countries' efforts to diversify their production and increase their export earnings. In assessing import sensitivity of the item in the context of the GSP, capacity utilization and profits in the U.S. industry are taken into account. Also considered are the level and growth of imports from developed and developing countries, the extent to which the item traditionally has been excluded from trade negotiations, and whether the U.S. industry has been injured by unfair trade practices. Interagency reviews culminate with the USTR transmitting advice on product designations and removals to the President.

The Committee expects this administrative process for annual review of articles to continue under the new Act. While section 504(c)(2)(A), as added by the bill, would require a periodic general product review for purposes of applying competitive need limits, interested parties should retain the right under the new program to petition annually for addition of individual products to, or deletion of individual products from, the list of GSP eligible articles under section 503.

The Committee also expects USTR to continue its practice of discretionary graduation of countries with respect to GSP eligibility for particular products in which they have demonstrated competitiveness even though competitive need limitations have not been exceeded. While discretionary graduation would normally be considered as part of the periodic general product review process, the Committee expects the right to be maintained under the annual product review procedure of a domestic industry to seek graduation of a product on the basis of a country's competitiveness with regard to that product as well as on the basis of the import sensitivity of the domestic product sector.

The Committee also intends that the factors enumerated under section 501, as amended by the bill, apply with respect to consideration of petitions, as well as to changes in product eligibility considered by the USTR in administering the amendments under section 5 of the bill. While intending the President to have continued flexibility in operating the GSP petition process, the Committee believes several objectives in the petition process must continue to be pursued.

First, the Committee recommends that a standard petition form be developed for GSP requests. That petition should not discriminate among parties affected by the program by subjecting those seeking modification or termination of GSP benefits to greater requirements than are imposed on petitioners seeking benefits. Petitions failing to provide required information should be refused further consideration unless the petitioner shows that, following a good faith effort to obtain that information, the information cannot be obtained.

The Committee is aware that the President is considering development of a standard petition under current authority and therefore does not intend to create a statutory petition process. The Committee strongly believes, however, that petitions containing limited amounts of information, such as petitioners' names, actions sought, and products involved, should be supplemented by information detailing anticipated impacts on U.S. industry and foreign suppliers if a request is to be granted. Information on trends concerning BDC's market shares in U.S. and important foreign markets, petitioners' actual production and capacity, the petitioners' costs of production, and thorough analyses of how these factors are likely to change if the request is granted should be included. Section 501 as amended will continue to place great emphasis on the effects that granting GSP treatment for a particular article will have on U.S. industry. Petitions failing to provide information reasonably available to petitioners permitting analysis of section 501 factors, particularly the information outlined above, should in most cases be refused review.

Second, the Committee approves of the President's intent to restrict review of petitions requesting additions to the list of eligible articles. The President has approved regulatory changes in the GSP program that will prevent reconsideration for three years of a petition concerning an eligible article or articles for which a petition has been denied. Furthermore, it is recognized that in some instances it may be appropriate to apply a longer waiting period. In gauging the appropriate period, factors such as production methods or processes and investment requirements should be considered as well as information indicating a change in circumstances since the previous review. At the same time, U.S. business would retain the right to seek modifications in GSP benefits on the basis of changes in circumstances on an annual basis.

Third, the Committee believes greater exposure of the GSP decision-making process is necessary to facilitate Congressional and public scrutiny of the program's adherence to the expanded section 501 guidelines, having regard at the same time for necessary safeguards for confidential business and other classified information. Information relied upon in formulating decisions, such as aggregate information on U.S. and world market shares, competitive ability, and the sensitivity of exports of articles to changes in their price, should be released on request. The reason for conclusions supporting GSP decisions should also be made available on request.

Fourth, the Committee recognizes that interested parties have an opportunity under the statutory provisions of the present program and its administration to participate fully in the review process. However, they should be given additional opportunities to submit information and comments on a petition prior to the making of a final decision. The present petition process includes development of an ITC report on probable economic effects on the relevant U.S. industry. The Committee believes it should be made clear that all interested parties are able to submit information to the ITC in accordance with section 503(a) of the Trade Act concerning competitive or potentially competitive countries other than a petitioning country which may impact U.S. markets as a result of the extension of benefits. Further, any interested parties should be given an opportunity to submit additional information and comments to the TPSC concerning that report before a final decision is made on the underlying petition.

Fifth, the Committee strongly encourages the President to promulgate additional regulations clarifying and detailing the requirements for obtaining modifications in GSP benefits. The Committee believes that a full specification of procedures to be followed by petitioners and by the President will improve the administration of the program and ensure that the administration will continue to be responsive to import situations which are likely to have substantial adverse consequences for U.S. producers of like and directly competitive products.

Finally, it is the Committee's expectation in conjunction with annual product reviews that parties interested in the implementation and protection of internationally recognized worker rights shall be granted the same privilege of participation in the giving of advice in the formulation of government actions pursuant to section 502(b) as amended as are extended to parties having significant economic interest in the formulation of government action pursuant to section 503 as amended.

The Committee expects the USTR to review each of the present GSP beneficiary countries to determine whether it complies with the designation criteria under section 502(b) and (c), in particular the new factors added by section 3 of the bill. The importance of this process, as well as the general product review required by 1987, make it imperative that the President have as much information as possible. The Committee strongly recommends the use of public hearings as an aid in obtaining this information.

The USTR should consult with interested U.S. industry representatives, particularly those who are actively engaged in, or seek to engage in trade and investment in BDCs. In annual product reviews as well as in the designation of BDCs and other relevant determinations under the GSP program, the President should invite comments from any party concerning any of the factors listed in sections 501 and 502(b) and (c).

In addition, it is the Committee's intent that USTR establish a formal procedure through which parties interested in the implementation and protection of internationally recognized worker rights at least once a year can offer testimony or submit written comments during at least one public hearing on issues pertaining to countries' eligibility for designation as beneficiary developing countries.

VOTE OF THE COMMITTEE IN REPORTING THE BILL

In compliance with clause 2(1)(2)(B) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the following statement is made relative to the vote of the Committee in reporting the bill. H.R. 6023 was ordered favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means to the House by a voice vote with an amendment.

OVERSIGHT FINDINGS

In compliance with clause 2(1)(3)(A) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives relating to oversight findings, the Committee has concluded, as a result of extensive hearings and an in-depth review of the issues involved, that the GSP program provides substantial economic benefits to developing countries and to the United States and should be renewed with the substantial improvements in H.R. 6023, as amended, to achieve a wider distribution of GSP benefits and certain other U.S. trade objectives.

In regard to clause 2(1)(3)(D) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, no oversight findings or recommendations have been submitted to the Committee by the Committee on Government Operations with respect to the subject matter contained in the bill.

BUDGETARY AUTHORITY AND COST ESTIMATES, INCLUDING ESTIMATES OF THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE

In compliance with clause 7(a) of rule XIII and with clause 2(1)(3)(B) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee states that H.R. 6023 as amended does not provide new budget authority or any new or increased tax expenditures.

In compliance with clause 7(a) of rule XIII and with clauses 2(1)(3) (B) and (C) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee provides below information furnished by the Congressional Budget Office on H.R. 6023 and required to be included herein:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 26, 1984.

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has examined H.R. 6023, amending the current Generalized System of Preferences, as approved by the Committee. The bill would extend until January 3, 1990 legislative authority to accord duty-free entry to eligible products from eligible countries. Under current law, the authority would expire January 3, 1985. In addition, the bill would place certain restrictions on preferential treatment, expand the existing list of statutory product exclusions, and modify the criteria for determining a country's eligibility.

Estimating the revenue loss from this bill is impossible due to the number of products and countries eligible for duty-free entry and the discretionary nature of the program. The bill would not affect budget outlays or tax expenditures.

With best wishes.
Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER.

INFLATIONARY IMPACT STATEMENT

With respect to clause 2(1)(4) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee states that H.R. 6023, as amended, would not have an inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the general economy.

CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW MADE BY THE BILL, AS REPORTED

SEC. 501. AUTHORITY TO EXTEND PREFERENCES.

The President may provide duty-free treatment for any eligible article from any beneficiary developing country in accordance with the provisions of this title. In taking any such action, the President shall have due regard for—

- (1) the effect such action will have on furthering the economic development of developing countries through the expansion of their exports;
- (2) the extent to which other major developed countries are undertaking a comparable effort to assist developing countries by granting generalized preferences with respect to imports of products of such countries; [and]
- (3) the anticipated impact of such action on United States producers of like or directly competitive products[.]; and
- (4) the extent of the beneficiary developing country's competitiveness with respect to eligible articles.

SEC. 502. BENEFICIARY DEVELOPING COUNTRY.

(a)(1) For purposes of this title, the term "beneficiary developing country" means any country with respect to which there is in effect an Executive order by the President of the United States designating such country as a beneficiary developing country for purposes of this title. Before the President designates any country as a beneficiary developing country for purposes of this title, he shall notify the House of Representatives and the Senate of his intention to make such designation, together with the considerations entering into such decision.

(2) If the President has designated any country as a beneficiary developing country for purposes of this title, he shall not terminate such designation (either by issuing an Executive order for that purpose or by issuing an Executive order which has the effect of terminating such designation) unless, at least 60 days before such termination, he has notified the House of Representatives and the Senate, and has notified such country of his intention to terminate such designation, together with the considerations entering into such decision.

(3) For purposes of this title, the term "country" means any foreign country, any overseas dependent territory or possession of a foreign country, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. In the case of an association of countries which is a free trade area or customs union, or which is contributing to comprehensive regional economic integration among its members through appropriate means, including, but not limited to, the reduction of duties, the President may by Executive order provide that all members of such association other than members which are barred from designation under subsection (b) shall be treated as one country for purposes of this title.

(4) For purposes of this title, the term "internationally recognized worker rights" includes—

- (A) the right of association;

Austria	Monaco
Canada	New Zealand
Czechoslovakia	Norway
European Economic Community member states	Poland
Finland	Republic of South Africa
Germany (East)	Sweden
【Hungary】	Switzerland
Iceland	Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

In addition, the President shall not designate any country a beneficiary developing country under this section—

(1) if such country is a Communist country, unless (A) the products of such country receive nondiscriminatory treatment, (B) such country is a contracting party to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and a member of the International Monetary Fund, and (C) such country is not dominated or controlled by international communism;

(2) if such country is a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, or a party to any other arrangement of foreign countries, and such country participates in any action pursuant to such arrangement the effect of which is to withhold supplies of vital commodity resources from international trade or to raise the price of such commodities to an unreasonable level and to cause serious disruption of the world economy;

(3) if such country affords preferential treatment to the products of a developed country, other than the United States, which has, or is likely to have, a significant adverse effect on United States commerce, unless the President has received assurances satisfactory to him that such preferential treatment will be eliminated before January 1, 1976, or that action will be taken before January 1, 1976, to assure that there will be no such significant adverse effect, and he reports those assurances to the Congress;

(4) if such country—

(A) has nationalized, expropriated, or otherwise seized ownership or control of property, including patents, trademarks, or copyrights owned by a United States citizen or by a corporation, partnership, or association which is 50 percent or more beneficially owned by United States citizens,

(B) has taken steps to repudiate or nullify an existing contract or agreement with a United States citizen or a corporation, partnership, or association which is 50 percent or more beneficially owned by United States citizens, the effect of which is to nationalize, expropriate, or otherwise seize ownership or control of property, including patents, trademarks, or copyrights so owned, or

(C) has imposed or enforced taxes or other exactions, restrictive maintenance or operational conditions, or other measures with respect to property so owned, the effect of which is to nationalize, expropriate, or otherwise seize ownership or control of such property, including patents, trademarks, or copyrights,

(5) if such country does not take adequate steps to cooperate with the United States to prevent narcotic drugs and other controlled substances (as listed in the schedules in section 202 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 812)) produced, processed, or transported in such country from entering the United States unlawfully;

(6) if such country fails to act in good faith in recognizing as binding or in enforcing arbitral awards in favor of United States citizens or a corporation, partnership, or association which is 50 percent or more beneficially owned by United States citizens, which have been made by arbitrators appointed for each case or by permanent arbitral bodies to which the parties involved have submitted their dispute; [and]

(7) if such country aids or abets, by granting sanctuary from prosecution to, any individual or group which has committed an act of international terrorism [.] ; and

Paragraphs (4), (5), (6), [and (7)] (7), and (8) shall not prevent the designation of any country as a beneficiary developing country under this section if the President determines that such designation will be in the national economic interest of the United States and reports such determination to the Congress with his reasons therefor.

(c) In determining whether to designate any country a beneficiary developing country under this section, the President shall take into account—

(1) an expression by such country of its desire to be so designated;

(2) the level of economic development of such country, including its per capita gross national product, the living standards of its inhabitants, and any other economic factors which he deems appropriate.

(3) whether or not the other major developed countries are extending generalized preferential tariff treatment to such country; [and]

(4) the extent to which such country has assured the United States it will provide equitable and reasonable access to the markets and basic commodity resources of such country **[.];

(5) the extent to which such country is providing adequate and effective means under its laws for foreign nationals to secure, to exercise, and to enforce exclusive rights in intellectual property, including patents, trademarks, and copyrights;

(6) the extent to which such country has taken action to—

(A) reduce trade distorting investment practices and policies (including export performance requirements); and

(B) reduce or eliminate barriers to trade in services; and

SEC. 503. ELIGIBLE ARTICLES.

(a) * * *

* * * * *

(c)(1) The President may not designate any article as an eligible article under subsection (a) if such article is within one of the following categories of import-sensitive articles—

(A) textile and apparel articles which are subject to textile agreements,

(B) watches,

(C) import-sensitive electronic articles,

(D) import-sensitive steel articles,

[(E) footwear articles specified in items 700.05 through 700.27, 700.29 through 700.53, 700.55.23 through 700.55.75, and 700.60 through 700.80 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States,]

(E) footwear, handbags, luggage, flat goods, work gloves, and leather wearing apparel which were not eligible articles for purposes of this title on April 1, 1984,

(F) import-sensitive semimanufactured and manufactured glass products, and

(G) any other articles which the President determines to be import-sensitive in the context of the Generalized System of Preferences.

(G) any other articles which the President determines to be import-sensitive in the context of the Generalized System of Preferences.

(2) No article shall be an eligible article for purposes of this title for any period during which such article is the subject of any action proclaimed pursuant to section 203 of this Act or section 232 or 351 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, after consulting with the United States Trade Representative, prescribe regulations governing rule-of-origin requirements under this title.

SEC. 504. LIMITATIONS ON PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT.

(a)(1) The President may withdraw, suspend, or limit the application of the duty-free treatment accorded under section 501 with respect to any article or with respect to any country; except that no rate of duty may be established in respect of any article pursuant to this section other than the rate which would apply but for this title. In taking any action under this subsection, the President shall consider the factors set forth in sections 501 and 502(c).

(2) The President shall, as necessary, advise the Congress and, by no later than January 4, 1987, submit to the Congress a report on the application of sections 501 and 502(c), and the actions the President has taken to withdraw, to suspend, or to limit the application of duty-free treatment with respect to any country which has failed to adequately take the actions described in section 502(c).

* * * * *

[(c)(1) Whenever the President determines that any country—

[(A) has exported (directly or indirectly) to the United States during a calendar year a quantity of an eligible article having an appraised value in excess of an amount which bears the same ratio to $25,000,000 as gross national product of the United States for the preceding calendar year, as determined by the Department of Commerce, bears to the gross national product of the United States for calendar year 1974, or

[(B) except as provided in subsection (d), has exported (either directly or indirectly) to the United States a quantity of any eligible article equal to or exceeding 50 percent of the appraised value of the total imports of such article into the United States during any calendar year.

then, not later than 90 days after the close of such calendar year, such country shall not be treated as a beneficiary developing country with respect to such article, except that, if before such 90th day, the President determines and publishes in the Federal Register that, with respect to such country—

[(i) there has been an historical preferential trade relationship between the United States and such country,

[(ii) there is a treaty or trade agreement in force covering economic relations between such country and the United States, and

[(iii) such country does not discriminate against, or impose unjustifiable or unreasonable barriers to, United States commerce, then he may designate, or continue the designation of, such country as a beneficiary developing country with respect to such article.

[(2) A country which is no longer treated as a beneficiary developing country with respect to an eligible article by reason of this subsection may be redesignated, subject to the provisions of section 502, a beneficiary developing country with respect to such article if imports of such article from such country did not exceed the limitations in paragraph (1) of this subsection during the preceding calendar year.

[(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term "country" does not include an association of countries which is treated as one country under section 502(a)(3), but does include a country which is a member of any such association.

[(d) Subsection (c)(1)(B) does not apply with respect to any eligible article if a like or directly competitive article is not produced on the date of enactment of this Act in the United States. The President may disregard subsection (c)(1)(B) with respect to any eligible article if the appraised value of the total imports of such article into the United States during the preceding calendar year is not in excess of an amount which bears the same ratio to $1,000,000 as the gross national product of the United States for that calendar year, as determined by the Department of Commerce, bears to the gross national product of the United States for calendar year 1979.]

(c)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) through (8) and subsection (d), whenever the President determines that any country—

(A) has exported (directly or indirectly) to the United States during a calendar year a quantity of an eligible article having an appraised value in excess of an amount which bears the same ratio to $25,000,000 as the gross national product of the United States for the preceding calendar year (as determined by the Department of Commerce) bears to the gross national product of the United States for calendar year 1974; or

(B) has exported (either directly or indirectly) to the United States a quantity of any eligible article equal to or exceeding 50 percent of the appraised value of the total imports of such article into the United States during any calendar year;

then, not later than July 1 of the next calendar year, such country shall not be treated as a beneficiary developing country with respect to such article.

(2)(A) Not later than January 4, 1986, and periodically thereafter, the President shall conduct a general review of eligible articles based on the considerations described in section 501 or 502(c).

(B) If, after any review under subparagraph (A), the President determines that this subparagraph should apply because a beneficiary developing country has demonstrated a sufficient degree of competitiveness (relative to other beneficiary developing countries) with respect to any eligible article, then paragraph (1) shall be applied to such country with respect to such article by substituting—

(i) "1984" for "1974" in subparagraph (A) of that paragraph;

and

(ii) "25 percent" for "50 percent" in subparagraph (B) of that paragraph.

(3) If the President determines that any beneficiary developing country, in any calendar year after 1984—

(A) had a per capita gross national product (calculated on the basis of the best available information, including that of the World Bank) of $5,000 or more; or

(B) exported (either directly or indirectly) to the United States a quantity of articles that was duty-free under this title and had an appraised value of more than 10 percent of the appraised value of the total imports of all articles that entered the United States duty-free under this title during that year;

then not later than July 1 of the next calendar year paragraph (1) shall be applied to such country with respect to all eligible articles by substituting—

(i) “1984” for “1974” in subparagraph (A) of that paragraph; and

(ii) “25 percent” for “50 percent” in subparagraph (B) of that paragraph.

(4) If the President determines that any beneficiary developing country had, for any calendar year (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the ‘determination year’) after 1984, a per capita gross national product (calculated on the basis of the best available information, including that of the World Bank) of $9,000 or more, then paragraph (1)(B) shall thereafter be applied with respect to the eligible articles of that country as follows:

(A) In the case of eligible articles that were subject during the determination year to a 50 percent limitation under paragraph (1)(B), “25 percent” shall be substituted for “50 percent” in that paragraph with respect to eligible articles of that kind during the 24-month period beginning not later than July 1, of the year after the determination year.

(B) In the case of eligible articles that were subject during the determination year to a 25 percent limitation under paragraph (1)(B), that limitation shall continue to apply to eligible articles of that kind during the 12-month period beginning not later than July 1 of the year after the determination year.

(C) The country shall not be treated as a beneficiary developing country with respect to eligible articles—

(i) to which subparagraph (A) applies, after the close of the 24-month period referred to in that subparagraph; or

(ii) to which subparagraph (B) applies, after the close of the 12-month period referred to in that subparagraph.

(5)(A) Not earlier than January 4, 1986, the President, subject to subparagraph (C), may waive the application of this subsection with respect to any eligible article of any beneficiary developing country if, before July 1 of the year after the calendar year for which a determination described in paragraph (1) was made with respect to such eligible article, the President—

(i) receives the advice of the International Trade Commission on whether any industry in the United States is likely to be adversely affected by such waiver,

(ii) determines, based on the considerations described in sections 501 and 502(c) and the advice described in clause (i), that such waiver is in the national economic interest of the United States, and

(iii) publishes the determination described in clause (ii), together with a summary of the reasons therefor, in the Federal Register.

(B) Any waiver granted under this paragraph shall remain in effect until the President determines that such waiver is no longer warranted due to changed circumstances.

(C)(i) No waiver may be granted under subparagraph (A) with respect to paragraph (4).

(ii) No waiver granted under subparagraph (A) with respect to paragraph (1), in regard to any eligible article of a beneficiary developing country to which a determination under paragraph (3) applies, may result in the imposition of any limitation exceeding that that would apply under paragraph (1) (A) or (B) without regard to paragraphs (2) through (8).

(iii) The waiver authority under subparagraph (A) is limited, with respect to the eligible articles of countries not subject to paragraph (3) or (4), during each 12-month period for which that authority is effective following the close of a calendar year referred to in subparagraph (A) to a quantity of those articles that has an aggregate value equal to 25 percent of the total value of all articles that entered the United States duty-free under this title during that calendar year. There shall be counted against the limitation imposed under the preceding sentence for any 12-month period only that quantity of any eligible article of any country not subject to paragraph (3) or (4) that—

(I) entered the United States duty-free under this title during that period; and

(II) is in excess of the quantity of that article that would have been so entered during that period if the 1974 limitation applied under paragraph (1)(A) and the 50 percent limitation applied under paragraph (1)(B).

(6) Except in any case to which paragraph (2)(B), (3), or (4) applies, the President may waive the application of this subsection if, not later than July 1 of the year after the calendar year for which a determination described in paragraph (1) was made, the President determines and publishes in the Federal Register that, with respect to such country—

(A) there has been an historical preferential trade relationship between the United States and such country,

(B) there is a treaty or trade agreement in force covering economic relations between such country and the United States, and

(C) such country does not discriminate against, or impose unjustifiable or unreasonable barriers to, United States commerce.

(7) A country which is no longer treated as a beneficiary developing country with respect to an eligible article by reason of this subsection (other than paragraph (4)) may be redesignated a beneficiary developing country with respect to such article, subject to the provisions of sections 501 and 502, if imports of such article from such country did not exceed the limitations (as they may have been adjusted as a result of the application of paragraph (2)(B) or (3)) in paragraph (1) during the preceding two calendar years.

(8) For purposes of this subsection, the term "country" does not include an association of countries which is treated as one country under section 502(a)(3), but does include a country which is a member of any such association.

(d)(1) Subsection (c)(1)(B) shall not apply with respect to any eligible article if a like or directly competitive article is not produced in the United States on January 3, 1985.

(2) The President may disregard subsection (c)(1)(B) with respect to any eligible article if the appraised value of the total imports of such article into the United States during the preceding calendar year is not in excess of an amount which bears the same ratio to $5,000,000 as the gross national product of the United States for that calendar year (as determined by the Department of Commerce) bears to the gross national product of the United States for calendar year 1984.
